

Mat Young is the Executive Vice President of Global Advocacy, Policy, and Stakeholder Relations at The Institute of Internal Auditors (IIA).

Mat has over 20 years of experience in public policy, having worked for a U.S. Senator, a U.S. House Committee, a federal regulatory agency, and four different professional/membership associations. His past policy contributions can be found in a number of U.S. federal and state laws, including the banning of tax strategy patents and advancing the interstate right to cross-border practice for CPAs.

At The IIA, Mat oversees the four programs within the Advocacy Team (Global Advocacy, Canada, the U.S., and Corporate Governance Engagement) and also has responsibilities directing the Office of the General Counsel, the IIA's Board Governance program, and the organization's risk and privacy compliance programs.

Mat earned a Master of Public Affairs at Princeton University and a Bachelor degree in Economics and Urban Studies from Trinity University. In addition to English, he has professional proficiency in French.
