

Sharon Clark is Vice-President of Professional Development at the Canadian Audit and Accountability Foundation, a not-for-profit organization dedicated to strengthening public sector audit, oversight, and accountability in Canada and around the world. Sharon manages business development, design and delivery of the Foundation's training courses and advisory services. Clients include legislative auditors and internal auditors in Canada, Latin America, Australia, Asia, Africa, and the Middle East.

Sharon was a Principal at the Office of the Auditor General of Canada for 15 years, where she led performance audits of various federal government departments, with a focus on auditing human resource management and ethics issues, environmental issues, and transportation. She also led the Office's performance audit methodology practice for 3 years, during which time she was responsible for revising the performance audit manual and procedures, and contributed to the development of international performance audit standards.

Prior to joining the Office of the Auditor General, Ms. Clark spent 10 years as a management consultant at PwC, specializing in human resource management consulting. She has an MBA from McGill University in Montreal and a BA in political science from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. She speaks English, French, Spanish, and Hebrew.
